

A first step towards action is deciding on long term goals and strategies:

Call to Action!

You have now gone through all four scenarios for the future of sexuality education. If anyone has any immediate thoughts to share, feel free to discuss these now.

Then, let us take some time to reflect individually upon what power you have to shape the future of sexuality education, feel free to look through the different scenario booklets again during this process.

You are now going to strategize around initiatives you might take to steer development in the right direction. Discuss together, how your group or organisation can work to make sexuality less of a taboo right now, that might create a ripple effect over time.

Which future would you personally like to experience, if we look past any constraints and limitations?

How will the different future scenarios impact the work/effort you or your organisation?

Whose sexual rights are you most concerned about in each scenario?

Which scenarios pose the biggest threat to your goals? What aspects of that development conflict with your goals, and why?

What could you/your organisation do today to avoid this development?

Which scenarios pose the biggest threat to your goals? What part of it, and why?

Define these interests together. Why do you value them?

What could you/your organisation do today to achieve this?

Is there anything you are doing today that could have unforeseen consequences in these different futures?

If you look around, do you see any signals that we as a society are moving towards one or more of these futures?

It is now time to specify and plan how you will contribute today, for a more comprehensive sexuality education tomorrow.

Take a moment to reflect, and write down individually what you think you or your group should do today to achieve your desired result in the future.

Try to define three concrete goals to achieve this individually.

Discuss your answers together, and feel free to build upon each other's responses!

It is time for the final step. Work together on formulating a list of five plans or actions that you could actually initiate today, in order to achieve the future you deemed most desirable. Try to be specific, and remember: no initiative is too small!
